City Council made final comments and directed staff to complete a comprehensive Pavement Management Plan, including a multi-year street paving strategy and the associated funding plan; to reassess Rosemead Boulevard, including the railroad-crossing entryway, and report back with scope and cost options; explore public transparency tools such as a dashboard and on-site 'Measure TC dollars at work' signage to show how the new sales tax revenues are being used. City Council further directed staff to return with an option to fully fund street sweeping from Measure W (instead of using gas tax), and to provide a defined scope of work for the proposed economic development specialist along with a cost comparison between a three-quarter-time and a full-time position. Finally, Council directed staff to bring back, at a later time, a broader policy discussion on whether fines (such as parking citations) should be adjusted to better reflect rising enforcement costs without becoming a revenue generator.
